A clarion is a medieval trumpet that had clear, shrill tones. Trumpets were often used to get people's attention when making announcements. We are also using "clarion" in the context of making announcements, as well as being thought-provoking when sharing our information and opinions with those people who are interested in new investment ideas.

Topic: Earnings Season

Q2 earnings announcements are now in full swing. The market seems to be relying, almost exclusively, on these earnings pronouncements being good, and thus being the catalyst to propel the market forward.

The major North American indexes are stuck just under their critical 200-day Moving Averages. A slate of good earnings should cause the indexes to get back on an upswing. A chorus of poor earnings could provide downside risk.

Talking about earnings, one of our Subscribers sent me an interesting article on post-earnings drift. This interesting concept was first espoused in a brief written by R. Ball and P. Brown in the Journal of Accounting Research, Autumn 1968, pp. 159-178, and entitled "An Empirical Evaluation of Accounting Income Numbers". There has been additional literature on the subject by other authors.

Essentially, what the researchers found was that when a (major) company reported earnings that were a surprise (either to the upside or downside) in comparison to analysts' expectations, the company's stock usually made a large move in response to the surprise in the days immediately following the announcement. But, more importantly, the researchers found that the stock continued to "drift" in the same direction for weeks, even months, afterwards.

This has major implications for the timing of stock purchases. What it means is that an investor can profit considerably by buying shares of companies that make earnings announcements that "Surprise". The tricky part is determining the extent of the Surprise. These days, the Surprise has to be really significant. Too often companies beat analyst expectations by a few pennies and the stock declines. So the Surprise has to be a real and meaningful surprise.

The stock continues to "drift" in the same direction because it takes analysts a while to digest the Surprise and recalculate their now-revised earnings expectations, not only just for the current year, but also for those following.

Of course, not all stocks continue to drift. They may make a move in that first week, then stay flat or range-bound until there is confirmation that the Surprise was not just a fluke. By the way, the Surprise does not have to be earnings. It could be top line. Or, management could raise "guidance" considerably.

Stock-of-the-Week

Amerix Precious Metals Corp. (APM: TSX-V)

Amerix is a junior mining company involved in the acquisition, exploration, and development of mineral properties, focusing on potential high-grade gold properties in central Brazil. The Company holds an option to acquire a 100% interest in the Limão property. It also holds a 0.5% Gross Royalty on the Ouro Roxo project, which it can increase to 2.5% through a US$800,000 payment.

Early in 2010, Amerix announced the review of a confirmation of high-grade gold potential on the Limão property. The confirmation was rendered by an independent geologist, who confirmed the historical data taken from eleven samples on Limão, indicating 2.37 grams per tonne gold to 106.6 per tonne gold. The average grade of the samples was 38.5 grams per tonne gold (1.22 oz per tonne gold).

At the end of June 2010, the Company obtained the results from the first phase of the 2010 program. This phase consisted of 1,841 one-metre auger holes on a line spacing of 100 metres and 81 rocks samples were taken along cut lines at 20-metre intervals. As a result, the Company announced two new grids. The North Grid covers an area 1.62 square kilometres and several gold-in soil anomalies were defined. The Southern Grid covers an area of 0.45 square kilometres and a well-defined 200-by-200 metre gold anomaly was defined.

We assume the Company will exercise its option to acquire a 2.5% Gross Royalty on all gold production from the Ouro Roxo project. The full 2.5% Gross Royalty could provide the Company with US$18-US$20 million in royalty payments over the next 12-15 years. Production payments are expected to begin before year-end 2010.

The Limão and Ouro Roxo projects are located in Brazil's mining-friendly Tapajos Region, which is one of the largest under-developed alluvial gold areas in the world.

Management's strength is in resource exploration and development, and the ability to develop long-term relationships with partners who are financially stronger to take on the risk of developing the project. Going forward, it is expected that Amerix will continue to seek a strategic partnership to develop the Limão property.

The accompanying chart shows that Amerix's shares have been essentially range-bound, between 3 cents and 7 cents. We are maintaining our Recommendation of Amerix Precious Metals Corporation as a Speculative Buy for longer-term risk-tolerant investors. Our 12-month Target Price is $0.23, although this is contingent on the Company making progress on its drill programs and completing the Gross Royalty transaction.
